Hi Emily, in case you have not seen the referred video... .. Here is one of the main problems. The older barns at the Arlington farm have the exhaust fans on one end which is an exterior wall. The bird poop drops below into the basement. The barns at the Tonopah facility have the exhaust fans built into the dividing wall. This dividing wall separates the chicken's living quarters and the manure room. The new barns also have conveyor belts that collect the chicken waste; poop, feathers, dander and maybe dead chickens. The belts direct the waste up to the ceiling of the 30 to 40 foot manure room and then, I believe, another belt takes the waste to the selected dropping point. As you can see in the video or pictures of these barns they end up with several piles of waste on the manure room floor. I do not know how often these belts are in service, but as they drop the waste downwards the exhaust fans are blowing outwards through the free falling waste. So not only are they exhausting the dander from the living quarters, but are dispersing the waste fines as the exhausted air travels through the dropping waste. I could take videos forever, but they would look just like the one I am sending you. During most days there is enough of a breeze to disperse the exhausted air to where it looks like a fine white haze. In the quiet mornings or afternoons when the wind flow is at an almost standstill is when you can see this dust cloud which resembles "fog". You are lucky if it is not drifting your way. It has been drifting east into the little town of Tonopah. When I head over into town as I near the haze is when I start smelling that awful stench. Late last night I was not so lucky, there was a breeze in my direction.

Here is EPA's link description of what this HAZE dust can do to us health wise. I believe these dust particles from this HAZE are "fine particles". "Small particles less than 10 micrometers in diameter pose the greatest problem, because they can get deep into your lungs, and some may even get into your bloodstream". Also do not forget that they are organic "animal" particles which also adds to our health concerns. Please consider this a complaint, aircomplaints did not get back to me on my last email and I appreciate that you always do. Thank you Emily. Raul.
